On arrival at your fly-in cabin, you'll get a brief orientation by the camp host and will meet your guide, who will be leading you in your hunt for tucanare, a.k.a. peacock bass. Breakfasts and dinners are served in a large screened dining room. Overnight at camp.

Day Four through Day Nine

PEACOCK BASS FISHING

Full days fishing begin with an early breakfast before heading out to the tributaries, lakes and lagoons of the Amazon watershed. Fishing from high-speed, shallow drafting tunnel boats or john boats, your guide will lead you to a variety of fishing spots each day where you will have the opportunity to experience both top-water and sub-surface action in a variety of fishing scenarios. A midday break with box lunch will let you seek out a respite from the sun, and give your arms a rest. After several more hours of fishing, in the late afternoon, return to camp for dinner and overnight. Conditions permitting, your camp typically is moved several times during the course of the week, providing a change in scenery and reducing fishing pressure throughout the river.
